Abstract

The competition in the fashion industry in Indonesia is becoming increasingly intense due to the rapid changes in consumer preferences and emerging trends. This is influenced by globalization and advancements in information and technology, which accelerate the exchange of information and provide consumers with more choices. Pomelo Fashion, a women's fashion brand from Thailand, has become one of the pioneers of omnichannel fashion brands in Indonesia. Pomelo utilizes digital marketing strategies to compete in this highly competitive market. This study aims to analyze Pomelo Fashion Indonesia's digital marketing strategies in enhancing brand awareness. A descriptive qualitative approach is used, with Integrated Marketing Communication theory as the foundation. Data were collected through interviews with five informants from both the internal and external sides of Pomelo Fashion Indonesia. The findings indicate that Pomelo Fashion Indonesia has not yet reached the top-of-mind position in the Indonesian fashion industry market. Therefore, it is necessary to optimize the digital marketing strategy, including strengthening content about new arrivals, digital campaigns on sustainability, and enhancing engagement with the Pomelo Girls community.
